EVD in Terre Haute to George Sylvester Viereck in New York City, April 28, 1926

Terre Haute, Ind. April 28th, 1926

My dear Viereck,1

It was with the deepest regret that I again missed you in New York. it would have been a great pleasure indeed to Mrs. Debs and myself to have met you and Mrs. Viereck, but unfortunately I was so scheduled that I had to leave for home soon after landing from Bermuda. I have been so anxious to see you, to take you by the hand and tell you in person how [sincerely?] I regard you, and how much I appreciate your friendship, but it is somehow my misfortune to miss you every time I get to New York. But I am sure the fates will not always conspire against us, and some good day, not far distant I hope, we shall walk into each others' arms and make up for all the lost time.

The marked copy of the Monthly with your fine article has been received and I need not say how very much I appreciate your continued kindness and consideration.

Mrs. Debs joins me in all cordial greetings and good wishes to you and Mrs. Viereck, and I beg you to count me always

Yours faithfully,

Eugene V. Debs.

¹ George Sylvester Viereck (1884–1962), commonly known by his middle name, was a German-born American poet and writer. His father, Louis Viereck, had been a pioneer socialist activist and newspaper editor who suffered political imprisonment in Germany. Viereck began writing poetry in German in 1898 and published his first book of verse, Gedichte [Poems] in 1904. During World War I he published The Fatherland, a German-sponsored propaganda journal advocating strict American neutrality. After the rise of HItler in Germany, Viereck worked as a de facto publicist for the regime as correspondent for a Munich newspaper and as an editor for the German Library of Information in New York City. Viereck's papers are housed and the University of Iowa.
